Excerpt: . . . 11 Employing an open business model facilitates upgrades to the LCS to warfighting capabilities as the threats evolve, and the open concept also helps us to reduce the total ownership cost of LCS over the years to come. Again, we appreciate the sport of the House Armed Services Sub-committee, and I personally thank you for the opportunity to talk to today, and I look forward to answering your questions. AYLOR Mr. T. The chair thanks all of our witnesses. Admirals, again, I very much appreciate your many, many years of service to our nation and the hardships of your time you spent away from your families, and the hardships you have endured. My frustration is not with your service records. My frustration is with your program. If 60 Minutes were to walk through your door, put a microphone in front of you and say, Admiral, you got something that was sup-posed to be a simple ship, mass-produced for about 220 million apiece. They are 18 months behind schedule, 300 million over schedule. Apparently every inch of the second vessel was welded by hand rather than by machine, and I dont see any plans that any future vessels are going to be produced any cheaper or any faster. And by the way, the competition that was supposed to be winner take all is now you have basically said, No, we are going to build some of each, so you got two D-minus students, who are being graded on a curve, and so they have...
