Excerpt: . . . 11 Alongside the FSSCC is the Financial Services Information-Shar-ing and Analysis Center, or FS-ISAC, the chief communications system for the sector on a wide variety of threats and challenges. Last year, Treasury devoted 2 million to develop and implement a plan for broadening the reach of the FS-ISAC. In the last couple of weeks, Federal Housing Finance Board Chairman Alicia Castaneda and I sent a joint letter to each of the federal home loan banks encouraging them to join the FS-ISAC. We continue to en-courage all financial institutions to sign up. Under the sponsorship of the Presidents Working Group on Fi-nancial Markets, and chaired by the Treasury, the Financial and Banking Information Infrastructure Committee, or FBIIIC, brings together representatives of all of the federal and state financial regulators. A cardinal rule of the FBIIIC and the key to its success and achievement over the last several years is the principle of re-sponsibility. The FBIIIC does not try to take over the responsibility or interfere in the work of any agency. What the FBIIIC provides is a means of coordinating efforts, sharing best practices, pooling talents and resources, facilitating communication, encouraging wherever possible and cajoling where necessary. While terrorist threats themselves are bad news, I see much good news in our latest experience. Our antiterrorism efforts are bearing fruit, providing valuable information that is being applied and acted upon appropriately by the financial sector just as soon as it is...
