Not illustrated. 1878 Excerpt: . very persevering, and at last have mastered one or two of Claribel s simplest works. I see one song upon your piano, said Horace, with a slight hesitation, which I know. And, if you sing thai, I must contradict you, and say your compass is not very limited. I see which you mean, she returned, with a quick little nod, as if in haste to dismiss the subject, yet speaking gently as of something she loved, but I sing that song only to myself. To continue our catechism, she went on, her eyes brightening again, perhaps reflecting some inexplicable brightness which had come into Horace Hohan s at her last words, I can read a little. In fact, I have read the third volumes of most of the novels that ever were written; I ve left off wasting my time over the first and second, as I ve found that to be unnecessary labor. I can talk a little sometimes; and I don t break Priscian s head oftener than the average female. Writing I don t understand. I ve no one to write to, so I never try it. Have you, he queried, seemingly himself taken unaware by his own question, really no friends, Miss Heringham? Only one. She is certainly the best friend I could have, but she travels with me always. Yourself, said Horace, in his quick comprehension of the grave, harmless irony which was new to him. And then, after a...
