That would be very true if the first steps had not already been taken. It is not true when the first part of the work has been properly done. In the first place, the teacher should be able to get more than the pupil can out of even an unfamiliar subject. In the second place, she is assumed to have a more general store of knowledge than the pupil, and the ability to see the relation of things in a truer light. Hence she is supposed to be able to arrange the material gathered in the preceding work into a logical and consistent whole. Most pupils enjoy a lecture by the teacher when adapted to their needs and properly presented. In the primary grades the lecture should resemble a story; in the grammar grades statements should be more concise. If facts...
